Dear Colleagues,

I am very pleased to share this update on the Baldy Center. We’ve had an exciting year: our first class of Fellows, conferences on topics ranging from intimate partner violence to climate change, and many interesting talks and workshops (the papers for most of which are available on our website). Also, I am pleased to announce our new Fellows and some of the events scheduled for next year.

Baldy Fellows Update

New Post-Doctoral Fellows for 2013 - 2014

Or Bassok completed his Doctorate of the Science of Law (JSD) at Yale Law School in 2013. His recent articles examine the relations between the sociological legitimacy of the American Supreme Court and its normative legitimacy; the effect of the rise of public opinion polls on the Court’s legitimacy; different social imaginaries and their influence on legal expertise; originalism as a method of esoteric writing; the American constitutional identity and the effects of media coverage on the legitimacy of national high courts. As a Tikvah Scholar at New York University School of Law during the 2012-13 academic year, he examined the prospects of developing a constitutional identity for Israel. At Yale, he was a Fulbright scholar and a Robina Foundation Visiting Human Rights Fellow (2011-12). Before going to Yale and after completing his law degrees at the Hebrew University, he served as a defense attorney in the Israeli Defense Forces where he defended soldiers before military courts and the Israeli Supreme Court. His last case before the Israeli Supreme Court dealt with the evidentiary meaning of defendant’s failure to testify in trial (Milstein v. Chief Military Prosecutor). As an Interdisciplinary Legal Studies Fellow at the Baldy Center, Or will investigate the role of law politics in constitutional thinking.

Jesse J. Norris completed a Ph.D. in sociology at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, and earned a J.D. from the University of Wisconsin Law School. His dissertation examined innovative forms of governance in European anti-poverty policy, based on case studies in Ireland and Portugal. Since graduating from law school, he has served as a visiting professor at Beloit College, worked as a staff attorney for four trial court judges, and started an independent estate planning practice.

His legal scholarship focuses on the governance of legal systems, often drawing on sociological theory or methodology to shed light on contemporary policy problems in the criminal justice system. Recent publications have analyzed judicial sentence modification doctrines, earned release policies, and state commissions to ameliorate racial disparities in criminal justice. Jesse’s current research investigates alleged entrapment in domestic terrorism prosecutions. This research aims to document and explain the apparent prevalence of entrapment in terrorism investigations since 9/11, including the recent spread of entrapment allegations to cases of environmental or left-wing terrorism. It will also clarify the normative and social-scientific bases for critiquing current informant practices, and evaluate the potential of specific doctrinal and administrative reforms to prevent entrapment abuses.

Anna Su is a 2013 graduate of Harvard Law School’s Doctor of Juridical Science (SJD) program. Her dissertation is a historical recovery of the American origins of our contemporary international legal regime on religious freedom. She completed the LLM program at Harvard Law School and obtained her first law degree (JD) as well as an undergraduate degree in Political Science (BA) from the Ateneo de Manila University. Prior to going to Harvard, she worked as a law clerk in the Philippine Supreme Court, and was a consultant to the Philippine government negotiating panel in its peace talks with the Moro Islamic Liberation Front. Her publications include: “Religious Law as Foreign Law in Constitutional Interpretation” (International Journal of Constitutional Law) and “Woodrow Wilson and the Origins of the International Law on Religious Freedom” (Journal of the History of International Law). During her stay at the Baldy Center, she will turn her dissertation into a book manuscript and in addition, examine the extraterritoriality of the First Amendment.

Kaja Tretjak holds a law degree from the University of California, Berkeley (Boalt Hall), a B.A. from Columbia University, and is completing her Ph.D. in anthropology at the City University of New York, Graduate Center. Grounded in over two years of ethnographic fieldwork, her doctoral dissertation explores the contemporary resurgence of libertarianism in the U.S. Her research shows how established libertarian organizations, a key component of the longstanding U.S. conservative coalition, have helped infuse libertarianism with renewed relevance for a generation of youth disenchanted with existing political economic arrangements, many of whom have taken up this knowledge on their own terms in ways that threaten the very political coalition that enabled its popularity. The project further traces an emerging crisis of state legitimacy across political and ideological boundaries, illustrating the centrality of cultural formations beyond policy and electoral politics to the largest popular movement motivated by distinctly libertarian ideas in the postwar period. Kaja is a co-founder of two grassroots, non-profit organizations: Hollaback!, an international movement to end street harassment, and Students Active For Ending Rape \(SAFER\), dedicated to fighting sexual violence and rape culture by empowering student-led campaigns to reform how universities handle sexual assault.

Errol Meidinger is the Director of the Baldy Center. He is a Professor of Law and Adjunct Professor of Sociology at SUNY Buffalo.. His recent research has focused on efforts to use “supra-governmental” regulatory programs, such as environmental certification and fair labor standards programs, to improve the social and environmental performance of business. He is currently working on two related research projects. The first focuses on interactions among state and non-state transnational governance organizations and is a collaboration with several scholars at other universities. The second seeks to understand the growing use by governments of limitations on access to their markets to promote environmentally and socially desirable behavior in other states. He earned his J.D. and a Ph.D. (Sociology) from Northwestern University.

Laura Wirth is the Assistant Director of the Baldy Center for Law & Social Policy. She holds a masters degree in Interdisciplinary Social Sciences from the State University of New York at Buffalo. She is responsible for organizing and coordinating the Baldy Center's activities, and manages the daily operations and Center staff. Laura maintains the budget and creates reports relevant to fiscal planning and projections. In addition, she administers the grant application and award processes for affiliated faculty and fellows, and oversees event planning and public communications. Laura works closely with Director Errol Meidinger to implement policy directives and new initiatives adopted by the Baldy Advisory Council.

Caroline Funk is the Baldy Center Research Associate. She holds a Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin and specializes in the archaeology of human/environmental relationships. She has worked in multidisciplinary and multinational teams in Chukotka, Portugal, and Alaska to answer questions about the intersection of cultural and environmental histories. She was a member of the Historic Properties team at the MC-252 Deepwater Horizon Oil Spill Response where she was deployed by the National Park Service to develop systems to streamline the Section 106 consultation process during clean up operations. Caroline currently leads a multidisciplinary research program in the Rat Islands, western Aleutians, Alaska. She and the group are investigating the long-term history of human use of the region to understand the impact of small-scale societies on the environment and to contribute to federally driven ecological restoration in the region. Caroline will work with the Baldy Center and affiliated faculty to develop funding proposals.

Zoe Leach is the Baldy Center Research Assistant. She earned her Master's Degree in Business Administration from Medaille College in 2011, and has a Bachelor's Degree in the Fine Arts from The Cooper Union. Zoe's work supports the full range of Baldy Center activities.
