The University at Buffalo is looking to be a major player in the future of western New York's job market.

University officials announced plans for a new advisory council that will help western New Yorkers prepare for jobs created by the UB 2020 plan.

"This council will represent both UB and our external partners who are concerned with work force development and also with minority and women-owned business enterprise development," said UB President John Simpson.

The aim of UB's 2020 plan is to make the school a model 21st century public research university.
