

What's Hot Health Care Deal Near Wall Street Pay Limits Michael Jackson Probe
Watch Live STRATEGY ROOM: News With A View Obama Town Hall

Enter your zip code

HOME U.S. WORLD BUSINESS POLITICS ENTERTAINMENT LEISURE HEALTH SCITECH OPINION SPORTS ON AIR

Buffalo Moms! Lose 47lbs, Follow 1 Rule!
I Cut Down 47 lbs of Stomach Fat In A Month By Obeying This 1 Old Rule Explore Now...

Buffalo: Mother of 2 Loses 43 lbs
I Cut Down 43 lbs of Stomach Fat in 30 Days Obeying this 1 Easy Rule. Explore Now...

U.S.

Sponsored By

- U.S. HOME
- CRIME
- AMERICA'S FUTURE
- SUPREME COURT
- NEWS ARCHIVE
- HOT TOPICS
  - SONIA SOTOMAYOR
  - NORTH KOREA
  - GENERAL MOTORS
- SECTION MAP
- SEE MORE

Free Staters Go Camping in New Hampshire -- With Rifles, Swords and Defiance

Saturday, July 25, 2009
Associated Press

Print | ShareThis

Free Stater Alicia Lekas, left, of Hudson, N.H., shoots at targets during an event last month at the Porcupine Freedom Festival in Lancaster, N.H.

LANCASTER, N.H. — There's no escaping the long arm of big government — even here at the far edge of a state whose license plate decrees that without freedom from oppressive authority you might as well choose death.

But for a group of about 500 in a tent colony here, the Porcupine Freedom Festival is about as close to Libertarian Nirvana as they're likely to get.

Held in June, the four days are about beer, burgers and bonfires. But more importantly, participants aim to carve out an enclave of less government and more liberty to do as they wish.

They aim to show a lost nation the way back to its political roots.

It hasn't been an easy message to sell these past few years. Their group, the Free State Project, has struggled to attract followers. But now, with Americans thinking anew about the reach and role of government, Free Staters see at least the hint of an opening.

So on festival weekend, they drink to the future. Between swigs of a custom brew called Overregulated Ale, they ridicule the Federal Reserve, applaud the defeat of a bill that would have required the wearing of seat belts, bemoan higher taxes and restrictions on gun rights.

ADVERTISEMENTS

Acai: Superfood or Hoax?

Top Diet Trends Tested. Does the Acai Berry live up to it promise?

"We said bad things are going to happen and they happen," Jason Sorens, a political science professor, preaching to the crowd clustered around picnic tables. "We say, we told you so."

Flapping overhead, on lines between spruce trees where others might dry bathing suits, Free Staters fly the Gadsden flag, with its serpent and warning to government: "Don't Tread on Me."

They circle around one activist's PT Cruiser to test tactics for dealing with government's front-line troops. "How will you perform when confronted by the police?" the schedule of events for the session asks. "You'll know once you practice."

Dozens walk through Porc Fest with handguns hanging from their waists, an unexpected sight on the way to mini-golf.

The threat of overreaching government is not new, Free Staters say, but it is rising. They wonder if more Americans aren't starting to realize that, too — before it's too late.

Last fall's protests against the economic bailout has been followed by public disapproval of the Obama's administration takeover of General Motors. In 36 states, legislators have introduced resolutions declaring their sovereignty over matters including the right to bear arms, citing the Constitution's 10th Amendment, which delineates the federal government's powers. Free Staters approve — though they are distrustful of most politicians.

Still, they are convinced the country will eventually recognize the truth. Just have a look, says Free Stater William Domenico, pointing to 18 fresh recruits from Florida, North Carolina and beyond, piling off a bus after a day's tour.

"Why?" asks Domenico, himself a refugee from an over-licensed life in Colorado. "Because they want government off their backs."

Americans' faith in government ebbs and flows, with voters giving Washington more rope during times of crisis. Even then, though, uncertainty lingers.

"Underneath it all, there is a suspicion of government doing too much," says Frank Newport, editor-in-chief of the Gallup Poll, which has long tracked public opinion on the matter. "That's a general strain of American culture."

Dislike of big government goes all the way back to colonists fed up with an English king, and a Constitution written to keep power in check.

The Civil War and the Great Depression shifted the balance, asserting the expanded power of federal government.

"None of these powers were ever formally given to these people (government officials) and so occasionally, whenever people notice that the federal government is behaving this way, they get really outraged by it," said Kevin R.C. Gutzman, a constitutional scholar at Western Connecticut State University.

FOX NEWS VIDEOS

TOP VIDEOS

Calling for Backup

In Sgt. Crowley's Defense

Detect and Destroy

US

- Would you buy alcohol from Starbucks?
- Spanky Spangler survives stunt crash
- Wife of Joey Buttafuoco writes tell-all
- Vet gives service dogs to wounded troops

Lifestyle articles by: ARA lifestyle.com

Trainer to the stars discovers a natural supplement for building strength and endurance

The Secret to Getting Highly Discounted Cruise Tickets

Are You Snoring Yourself To Death?

How to Keep Your PC Clean and Quick

Computer Slowing Down? What to Do About It

Credit Checks that Could Hurt You

ADVERTISEMENT

MOST ACTIVE

Articles

foxnews.com

Politics

After World War II, broad political consensus saw most Americans willing to follow Washington's lead, says Marc Hetherington, a Vanderbilt University professor and expert on public trust in government. But wariness soon returned, though not nearly to the extent hoped for by some advocates of less government.

"If we do not carve out a sphere of freedom now, freedom will be lost for a long time to come," Sorens, then a Yale University doctoral student, wrote in July of 2001.

He and a few like-minded thinkers met over bagels in Asheville, N.C., and devised a plan. They called upon hardcore activists to move to a small state and do everything possible to take over and scale back government.

The timing of their pitch couldn't have been much worse.

Weeks after the Free State Project started, Al Qaeda terrorists flew jets into the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. The attacks, two wars and two recessions over the past eight years unsettled U.S. voters' attitudes toward government.

In the fall of 2001, for the first and only time since Gallup began asking the question, the number of Americans who said they wanted government to do more reached 50 percent.

"After 9/11 we had a hard time," says Sorens, now a professor at the State University of New York at Buffalo. "We had some people quit because they said they didn't want to become part of a secession movement, even though we weren't."

Free Staters pushed ahead, choosing as their destination New Hampshire, whose voters have a hard-earned reputation for political independence. They set out to recruit 20,000 activists by 2006 to sign a pledge to move within five years.

Some of the most spirited moved immediately, but recruitment lagged. The group now has 9,400 participants. About 450 have moved to New Hampshire, joining 250 already there.

The small band of Free Staters in New Hampshire has been trying both conventional and more novel strategies to curtail its government's role.

A number have run for office. Four have won seats in the 400-member state House of Representatives, the largest in the country. Free State activists have campaigned furiously against measures perceived as emblematic of excessive government, like a mandatory seatbelt bill and budget hikes.

Meanwhile, a group of mostly younger Free Staters have decided the best way to keep government in its place is to needle it, through small acts of civil disobedience.

Then, at June's end, they pack Roger's Campground to breathe deeply of mountain air, camaraderie and a life away from government.

The weekend is a big party. But it is also a statement, based on sober thinking and often rooted in personal experience.

Pamela Ean's misgivings about government were confirmed at work. A high school teacher, Ean was frustrated trying to meet the testing standards set by the federal No Child Left Behind law. She calls it an illegal power grab by the federal government, and doesn't see it ending there.

"When you think about it, the federal government is taking over the banking institutions. They're taking over industry. It's scary. I mean, what's next?" asks Ean, who last year ran together with her 19-year-old son for a state legislative seat. They both lost in the primary, but helped unseat the 13-term Republican incumbent.

People have arrived at this ideological destination by different routes. There's the substantial right-to-bear-arms crowd. Some want drug laws loosened. Others are focused on the economy and see government's hand as the source of the problems.

Still others get their hackles up over high taxes.

While more Free Staters lean Republican, there's little enthusiasm here for George W. Bush, whose administration is viewed as having broken promises to make government smaller. His Democratic replacement, meanwhile, draws backhanded applause — for waking people up with the pace of "centralizing everything."

With the early morning sun climbing fast, a handful of Free Staters crouch low in a gravel lot to test their resolve on distant targets. Shoulders tense, eyes focused down the length of .22-caliber rifles, they're trying to take out the "redcoats" with 13 bullets — one for each of the original colonies.

"This is what America is all about — individual freedom, less intrusive government, self-reliance," says gunsmith Tony Stelik, a political refugee from 1980s Communist Poland. "Now it's rulers are trying to change it."

Down to her last target, shooter Alicia Lekas nails it, although she seems an unlikely citizen soldier. Lekas makes a living teaching Scottish folk dancing. Her America is embodied in a story of the time a tree fell on a friend's house near Concord and, instead of waiting for government, neighbors responded with their own chain saws.

She says she can't imagine shooting a living creature, but she'll do it if the need arises.

"A bad guy might be the individual crook," the new rifleman says, "Or it might be somebody who's taken over government."

Either way, she's ready.

▶ See Next Story in U.S.

Print | ShareThis

PEOPLE WHO READ THIS ALSO READ

- Police: Fake Cop Tried to Stop Real Cop in California
- Naval Officer's Letter Accuses Newspaper Reporter of Sexual Harassment
- Fresh Off Controversy, Sen. Boxer Faces Potentially Tough Challenge From Carly Fiorina
- Police Hunt Kidnapper of New York Woman Who Ran Naked and Screaming From Van
- Oregon Man Drives Bomb to Police Station

Sponsored Links ADVERTISE HERE

- Acai: Superfood or Hoax?
Top Diet Trends Tested. Does the Acai Berry live up to its promise?
News11.TV
- Mom Makes $63/Hr Online
Mom makes $5,500+ a month! Read her story to find out how she did it.
www.NewYorkGazetteNews.com
- Bipolar Support Program
Thinking Forward® Offers You Free Info, Tools & Advice. Sign Up Now.
BipolarTreatmentInfo.com

- 1 North Carolina Father, Sons Among 7 Charged With Plotting 'Violent Jihad' »
- 2 Prosecutor: Dad Threw Girl Off Cliff to Avoid Child Support »
- 3 Woman Spent Week Stuck Between Toilet, Door »
- 4 GPS Typo Leads Couple 400 Miles Off Course »
- 5 Russian Navy Reveals Its Secret UFO Encounters »

House, Senate Lawmakers Race to Advance...
 U.S. Presses Israel Over Settlements Amid...
 U.S., China Have Pointed Questions Despite...
 New York, Other Major Cities Passed Over...
 Professor, Officer Expected to Meet...

More Politics

THE LOWEST RATE. GUARANTEED.
 On our hotels ONLY AT BestWestern.com
 Check Rates NOW!

ADVERTISEMENT

MARKETPLACE

- AUTOS
- MORTGAGES

Interest Rates

30 yr fixed	5.44%	48 month new car	7.27%
15 yr fixed	4.83%	6 month CD	1.28%
$30K home equity loan	8.60%	1 yr CD	1.64%

Bankrate.com

Find a Car	Find a Mortgage	Get Voicemail	See Yours FREE!	Fox News Shop
Celebrity News	Lifestyle Magazine	Credit Report	Save up to $500

Do NOT Pay for White Teeth
Learn the trick discovered by a mom to turn yellow teeth white w/under $10.

New York Jobs: ($7k/Mo)!
Read The Secrets of New York Residents who Make $7000/Month Online...

Home U.S. World Politics Health Business SciTech Entertainment Video Opinion Sports Leisure

Careers Internships - FNCU Fox Around the World RSS Feeds
Advertise With Us Terms of Use Privacy Policy Contact Us Email FOXNews.com Newsroom

This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten, or redistributed. © 2009 FOX News Network, LLC. All rights reserved. All market data delayed 20 minutes.