In an interview soon after the launch of the exchange programme in Harare last week, UZ Vice Chancellor Professor Levy Nyagura said the programme, which was expected to improve the country's ability to deal with the virus would see at least 15 students benefiting over five years.

"The students will in turn offer clinical pharmacology expertise to multidisciplinary teams to achieve the HIV and AIDS research goals for Zimbabwe." said Prof Nyagura.

Buffalo University Associate Dean Professor Gene Morse, said his institution chose to partner with the UZ following 'reputable expertise' associated with the college's medical clinic. "University of Zimbabwe has a history of credibility and it has also become a universal phenomenon that the world concentrates on research to deal with the pandemic," Prof Morse said. Selection of eligible students, which would be based on merit, is expected to start as soon as the University opens in the next semester.

The UZ has another partnership with the University of San Francisco California in USA aimed at evaluating the effectiveness of microbicides.

Microbicides are gels, creams or a film applied to women's private parts. They inhibit the virus from entering the human body.
