

SOUTH CENTRAL REVIEW

Now boasting more than a quarter century of publication, the South Central Review publishes a stimulating mix of interdisciplinary scholarly articles, essays, interviews, and opinion pieces. This special double issue, Shakespeare & Science, features new articles by Jean Feerick, Carla Mazzio, Kristen Poole, Elizabeth Spiller, Valerie Traub, Henry Turner, and William West. Shakespeare & Science aims to move beyond earlier assessments of Shakespeare and particular sciences, and beyond the analysis of thematic traces of historical arenas of scientific practice, investigation and explication. Rather, the authors in this volume move toward a more nuanced understanding of forms of consilience and contestation between dramatic and scientific practices, epistemologies, mentalities, and assumptions integral to the making and unmaking of knowledge.

South Central Review is the official journal of the South Central Modern Language Association (SCMLA), and is available to members as a benefit of membership. For more information visit <http://www.ou.edu/scmla/>.
