RESEARCH INTERESTS

My areas of research interest are environmental justice and injustice; Indigenous decolonial movements and politics; gender, sexuality, and Indigeneity; medical anthropology and anthropology of the body; Indigenous ontologies, epistemologies, and methodologies; Indigenous notions of history and time; and shamanism and more-than-human ancestor landscapes. Through my work on shamanic transformational politics among Mapuche people in Chile and pan-Indigenous communities on the north coast of Peru, I rethink previously theorized ontologies, epistemologies, politics, and forms of power to produce decolonial knowledge. I show how Indigenous shamanic discourses and practices can be superb tools for transforming colonial and neocolonial structures of power—and for producing new logics and decolonizing epistemologies, methodologies, and theories in academia—because they challenge Western assumptions about the nature and organization of the world. Shamanic practice and engagement with more-than-human landscapes trouble the distinctions between life and nonlife; past, present, and future; human and more-than-human; nature and culture; history and myth; matter and spirit; and man and woman, as well as capitalist divisions of species, landscapes, and peoples. These Western distinctions, in turn, aim to discredit Indigenous practices that collapse these categories.

Because shamans mediate within and between worlds and temporalities, they offer a particularly productive place from which to question dominant power structures and envision new realities and futures. My work traces the many forms of social critique wielded by Indigenous shamans, from gender and landscape constructions to history, memory, and politics. I also study shamans' roles as public intellectuals who offer alternative visions that inform Indigenous political mobilization and shape the larger politics of knowledge throughout Chile, Peru, and the world. Drawing from critical race and feminist theory, queer theory, new materialism, and studies of Indigeneity, I analyze the social, political, and cultural implications of Indigenous more-than-human consciousness and queer shamanic politics. Specifically, I show how Indigenous ancestor-mountains challenge traditional Western ideas of personhood, law, state histories, understandings of time, and social and historical memory, and drive collective ethics and social and environmental justice.
