This year, we reach a number of important milestones. First, the UB Gender Institute celebrates its 25th Anniversary! It began as a faculty and graduate student reading group in the 1990s to become the only research institute in the SUNY system devoted to the study of women, gender, and sexuality. This year also marks the 50th anniversary of the Women’s Studies department at UB, which was one of the first in the country. During that same year—1972>Title IX was enacted, which prohibits discrimination based on sex in education programs or activities that receive federal funding. Although there is still unfinished business regarding Title IX and the struggle for gender equity continues, this legislation has nonetheless transformed the lives of girls and women. In 1972, for instance, approximately 300,000 girls nationwide played high school sports every year. Today, that figure is three million. For college women athletes in 1971, the scene was grim. Only 15% of NCAA student-athletes were women. Today, that number is 44%.

And yet in the midst of all of these important signs of progress, we continue to see our country move backward on fundamental rights including the right to abortion, LGBTQ+ rights, trans rights, and civil rights. With the Supreme Court overturning Roe v Wade in Dobbs v Jackson Women’s Health Organization (JWHO), more than 36 million women of reproductive age, and more people who can become pregnant, in 26 states have already lost or will soon lose access to abortion. And those in blue states are not safe either. Although New York has vowed to be a sanctuary state for abortion rights, the Supreme Court in the future could overturn this state law just as we saw them overturn NY’s gun licensing law in NYSRPA v Bruen this summer.

This grim picture also includes the rise of anti-LGBTQ+ policies at the local and state levels ranging from Florida’s “Don’t Say Gay” law to the Texas GOP platform. But of the nearly 240 anti-LGBTQ+ bills filed in 2022, the vast majority of them target trans people. Most of these bills eliminate or ban trans people from accessing public life, education, and gender-affirming care. It is at this critical juncture that the UB Gender Institute will celebrate its 25th anniversary, and I use “celebrate” here advisedly to acknowledge the important work that we do as a community whether it is sharing our published work or engaging in conversations on contemporary issues at one of our events. Now more than ever such connections are needed. To this end, the Provost has increased the UB Gender Institute’s budget to include more funds for our research, which will go toward faculty projects, as well as toward increased investment in our dissertation fellowships. Details will be forthcoming.
We have an exciting array of programs planned for the coming year. During our anniversary year, the UB Gender Institute received a generous Baldy Center Conference Grant for a year-long series of lectures, book events, and panel discussions on the theme of “Social Reproduction: Labor, Social Justice, and the Value of Human - Life.” The series, which will be in-person with a virtual option, will kick off on Thursday, September 22nd with Silvia Federici, co-founder of the International Feminist Collective and an organizer of the wages for housework campaign in the 1970s. She will discuss her most recent book Patriarchy of the Wage. In 1980, she received her doctorate from the Philosophy Department at UB and the Philosophy has generously agreed to co-sponsor this event. On Thursday, October 27th, Premilla Nadasen, Claire Tow Professor of History at Barnard, will speak on her most recent work on social reproduction. Thanks to the English and History Departments for co-sponsoring this event.

We will also continue our New Books, New Feminist Directions series for a second year with two exciting events. Katja Praznik (Arts Management) will discuss her new book Art Work (Toronto 2021), which demystifies the romantic notion of creating art as an act of love without financial concerns, and looks instead at art as a form of labor. Silvia Federici will offer commentary on Friday, September 23rd.

The second book event will feature Miriam Thaggert’s forthcoming Riding Jane Crow: African American Women on the American Railroad (U of Illinois P, 2022), which highlights Black women’s experiences as passengers and workers on or near the American trains from 1860-1925. Madhu Dubey at the U of Illinois, Chicago will serve as commentator. This will be a virtual event on Thursday, November 17th.

Finally, our Feminist Research Alliance Workshop continues for its 12th season. We have a wonderful line-up of UB faculty from a wide range of disciplines, beginning with Shaanta Murshid (Social Work) on “Transnational Bangladeshis in love, desire, and violence” on Thursday, October 6th at noon. Other workshop participants include Anne B. Curtis, SUNY Distinguished Professor in the School of Medicine, who will speak on “Gender disparities in patients with cardiac arrhythmias” on November 3rd at noon, and Deborah Reed-Danahay, Jean Monnet Chair, Anthropology, who will speak on “Life Stories of Middle-class French Women in 21st-century London” on December 1st at 12 noon. All will be virtual events.

As you can see, we have an exciting year ahead! To find out more about the Institute, check out our website and join our listserv by becoming an affiliate. I look forward to seeing you at our events this year.

Planned Parenthood Rally in NYC. From Creative Commons
You were part of the original group of women faculty who helped found the Gender Institute, what has changed since it was founded?

Everything has changed! When the institute was started, there were many feminist scholars at UB who networked with each other, but there wasn’t any organized way for them to connect, particularly to include those who worked in disciplines outside the humanities. I was recruited to join the initial group because I was in the sciences. From the inception, there has been a commitment in the Gender Institute to work across disciplines, with important efforts to bring people together across disciplines to develop new ideas and to move research forward on gender and sexuality at UB.

What prompted your research interest in cancer and epidemiology?

My background is in nutrition; I worked for several years in clinical and community nutrition before I went to graduate school. From that experience in the field, I knew that I wanted to do epidemiologic research on nutrition in relation to chronic diseases. I came to UB because there were researchers here doing groundbreaking work on cancer and nutrition. It was a great opportunity to work with them.

How does cancer research relate to gender? (I know one of your interests includes breast cancer)

Most of my research is focused on breast cancer which has everything to do with gender—while a small number of men get breast cancer, it predominantly affects women and, as you are probably aware, breast cancer affects a large number of women. There are more than 2 million new cases and about 685,000 breast cancer deaths globally each year. Women have been very influential at every level in moving breast cancer research forward to improve understanding, prevention and treatment, and in making sure that appropriate funding is available to address this important public health issue. They have been pivotal in advocacy, in funding decisions and in doing the research.

This double book launch will be an intergenerational conversation on the past, present, and future of Social Reproductive Theory. Federici and Praznik will engage in a transgenerational feminist discussion to point out the relevance of social reproduction and the ways feminist interventions in this terrain provide alternatives to capitalist relations.

Silvia Federici is one of the key figures among the group of feminists that spurred the new radical theorizing of social reproduction in the 1970s. In her keynote address, Federici will discuss the enduring relevance of social reproduction and how the theorizing of contradictions in this terrain are necessary for social movements dedicated to reorganizing everyday life and creating non-exploitative social relations.

Co-sponsored by UB’s Baldy Center, and the Department of Philosophy.

Household Workers Unite: The Untold Story of African American Women Who Built a Movement

Premilla Nadasen is the author of four books, most recently Household Workers Unite: The Untold Story of African American Women Who Built a Movement, which is a new classic of history-from-below that reconstructs the work of mainly Black women domestic workers in the post-war period. Nadasen is the winner of the first Ann Snitow Prize for writers who combine intellectual pursuits with feminist and social justice activism. Her keynote at UB will be based on her forthcoming book on social reproduction with Haymarket Press.

ABOUT HOUSEHOLD WORKERS UNITE

Telling the stories of African American domestic workers, this book resurrects a little-known history of domestic worker activism in the 1960s and 1970s, offering new perspectives on race, labor, feminism, and organizing.

In this groundbreaking history of African American domestic-worker organizing, scholar and activist Premilla Nadasen shatters countless myths and misconceptions about an historically misunderstood workforce. Nadasen shows how these women were a far cry from the stereotyped passive and powerless victims; they were innovative labor organizers who tirelessly organized on buses and streets across the United States to bring dignity and legal recognition to their occupation.

Co-sponsored by UB’s Baldy Center, Department of History, and the English Department.

To “ride Jane Crow” is to challenge the mythological aura of the railroad in American culture. Reading legal, labor, and travel history; census records and town directories; blueprints, newspapers and town councils records; diaries, short stories, letters, film, and photographs, the book examines the large cultural archive of the railroad in the U.S. and that archive’s notable absence of women of color, studying how the space of the archive replicates some forms of the American train car; both are repositories that inadequately hold the African American woman.

ABOUT RIDING JANE CROW:
Riding Jane Crow foregrounds Black women’s experiences as passengers and workers on or near the American train. Focusing on the period from 1860 to 1925, the book reads the train compartment as a contested travel space or problematic work site.

Gender Institute Statement
Leaked Draft of the Supreme Court Decision to Overturn Roe v Wade

The University at Buffalo’s Gender Institute is outraged at the implications of the leaked draft of the Supreme Court’s decision to overturn the landmark 1973 case of Roe v Wade. The fact that we are writing this statement at a time of unimaginable hate and violence, when a white supremacist terrorist attacked Buffalo’s East Side, killing ten people and injuring three, reminds us of the founding principles of the Reproductive Justice (RJ) movement as stated by SisterSong, the nation’s largest multi-ethnic RJ collective: “the human right to maintain personal bodily autonomy, have children, not have children, and parent the children we have in safe and sustainable communities.”

The rights to equality, bodily autonomy, dignity, and safety are fundamental human rights that link the fight against white supremacy with the fight against legislation that criminalizes access to safe abortions.
